GAMING

Handbook
of manners

Why an etiquette book?

The etiquette guide will help you understand how the Valhalla team tries to maintain the server concept and what will and will not cause problems for us sooner or later.

Nobody likes rigid rules

Normally 90% of all players play relaxed and without any problems. And we don't want 1000 rules now because of the 10% players that cause problems.

Therefore: Whoever as an individual or as a tribe violates the etiquette too much or too often will get special editions/special rules from the team, so that not everyone has to suffer because of individuals.

The bosses on the boss map are end content.

DON'Ts: Please do not give a "newbie" a dino and then move through the boss map. This gives guaranteed no title but only trouble & frustration and helps no one.

DOES: Make real alliances, tame, breed and just play the game, because that's what the game is for.

The title system

The title system is a tribute to achievements in the game and otherwise does not provide any benefits. If you cheat yourself out of titles instead of earning them, they can be revoked. Just think about what is sportive competition and what is not.

The "normal" bosses

DON'Ts: Do not play the game FOR others.
Please don't give a "new-foreign-player" just a dino and then move through the bosses and unlock engrams. That's not a sense of accomplishment for the new player either.

DOES: Only do bosses together if everyone in the group can visibly contribute.

You can explain to a "new-foreign-player" how to defeat a boss or you can sell him neutered boss dinos or un-neutered tames.

You can also help with the artifacts. Then the new player can do the bosses himself.

New players should first create their own boss army and then you are welcome to help. Ride on your own boss dinos and support him, but let him and his army succeed.

You are also welcome to make an alliance with good acquaintances and clap bosses together and push them a bit. But every "new player" must have earned at least the one dino he rides into the boss fight on, otherwise he's just not boss-ready.

If you want to help your old school friend, tame dinos with him and help him with his first boss dino. All no problem, it should just be allowed to play yourself too.

Push tribemembers

DOES: You can do whatever you want in the tribe. But please try to keep in mind that...

DON'Ts: If you invite players for a week, push them and then dismiss them from the clan again, this will cause trouble in the long run... Don't do that! Your colleague can still play a bit and have fun.

Trade & Services & Gifts

DOES: You are bored and want to do something different or help.

Think about what services can help players without giving them everything as a gift and having them leave the server tomorrow because they've already seen everything.

If someone asks for help answer him of course. Just play with players and accompany them when they need help. But don't just give them all the stuff they need.

Accompany players on ONE dino you are riding and let him do some stuff himself with his dinos. Then he has more fun. If he has no good dinos tamed some together with him.

If you sell other players something that is also available in the store, ask for appropriate resources or an appropriate number of ShopPoints. Always live and let live.

DON'Ts: Please do not underbid the store mercilessly. The server has no Pay To Win and accordingly everything can be earned except skins etc. on. Therefore you can easily offer everything that is available in the store and even better and then you can undercut the store in everything. But with that you break the server and that is a very good reason to ban. Who knows that he wants to trade super much you should come to the admin team so that we can agree.

Do not offer gifts in chat or a new player unsolicited before the feet. This is unfortunately also really rude, many want to earn achievements themselves.

Please do not give away Tek structures to other players. Rather help them to tame dinos and support them and their boss army in the boss fights.
